

Trey Bowles – Vice President of Marketing

Trey joined Big Jump Media Inc.'s executive team in 2008 as Vice President of Marketing and has been energetically engaged in the driving of all marketing endeavors for tangle.com, the world's largest faith-based and family friendly social network, ever since. Additionally, Bowles is responsible for managing both the music and media strategies for the social network, and ensuring the maintenance of a fun and social interactive community where faith-based and family friendly users can come together and enjoy a secure environment in which to connect and communicate with others.

Bowles has significant experience with building and running entertainment companies like World Digital Media Group, a project created and supported by RadioShack, Dish Network (Echo Star) and Sirius Satellite Radio. The project's main focus was to create a new medium for music consumption. Bowles is the co-founder of Trivate Entertainment, a multi-faceted media group that creates, promotes and distributes positive content in the entertainment marketplace. Bowles got his start in the world of Internet Marketing in 1998 as one of the first employees hired at Musicforce.com, which was sold to Gaylord Entertainment in 1999.

As a recognized voice on the future of online media and through his extensive experience in profitable Internet Marketing and management of entertainment-based businesses, Bowles has provided immeasurable guidance and strategic insight for building many different businesses in the new media, entertainment and technology marketplaces. From building one of the fastest-growing companies in the history of the Internet age — Morpheus — to working with several large multinational corporations, Trey continues to set his sights on building businesses that expand and create communities across the globe.

Trey received his BA in Marketing from Baylor University.